Welcome to Appley Park

History

Appley Park forms a component of the grounds of St John's House which was believed to have been landscaped by Humphry Repton around 1798. Although it has not been proposed as a historic park or garden, sufficient remains of the ancient coastal woodland and original features to give the site an interesting and historic perspective.

Access and location to Appley Park

Vehicular access to the car park is along the Ryde seafront whilst pedestrians and cyclists have a choice of four access routes. The site caters well for disabled users, particularly the provision of a tarmac coastal footpath that runs along the northern border.
